

Research Announcement: Moody's - US higher education outlook remains negative on low tuition revenue growth

New York, December 05, 2018 --

- Increasing expenses outpace constrained revenue for most universities and colleges
- Private universities will fare better than publics, with nearly 60% projected to achieve revenue growth of 3%

The 2019 outlook for the US higher education sector remains negative for the second consecutive year owing to constrained tuition revenue growth, the main revenue stream for most universities and colleges, Moody's Investors Service says in its annual outlook.

"Operating revenue growth will remain low for many four-year colleges and universities over the outlook period, resulting in continued challenging business conditions," according to Susan Shaffer, a Moody's Vice President says. "Weak net tuition revenue growth between 1% and 3.5% for most universities will constrain total overall revenues."

Colleges and universities will look to further control costs, which will lead to longer term challenges related to programmatic and capital investment. For most colleges, rising labor costs, which are roughly 65%-75% of expenses, will remain the largest hurdle.

The higher education sector is generally adaptable to systemic changes, however. The sector has amassed healthy financial reserves during the outlook period following several years of robust investment returns. This strength has bolstered endowment payouts and philanthropic support.

Moody's outlooks consider the forward-looking assessment of fundamental credit conditions that will affect the creditworthiness of the sector for the next 12-18 months.
